IMAGINE THIS

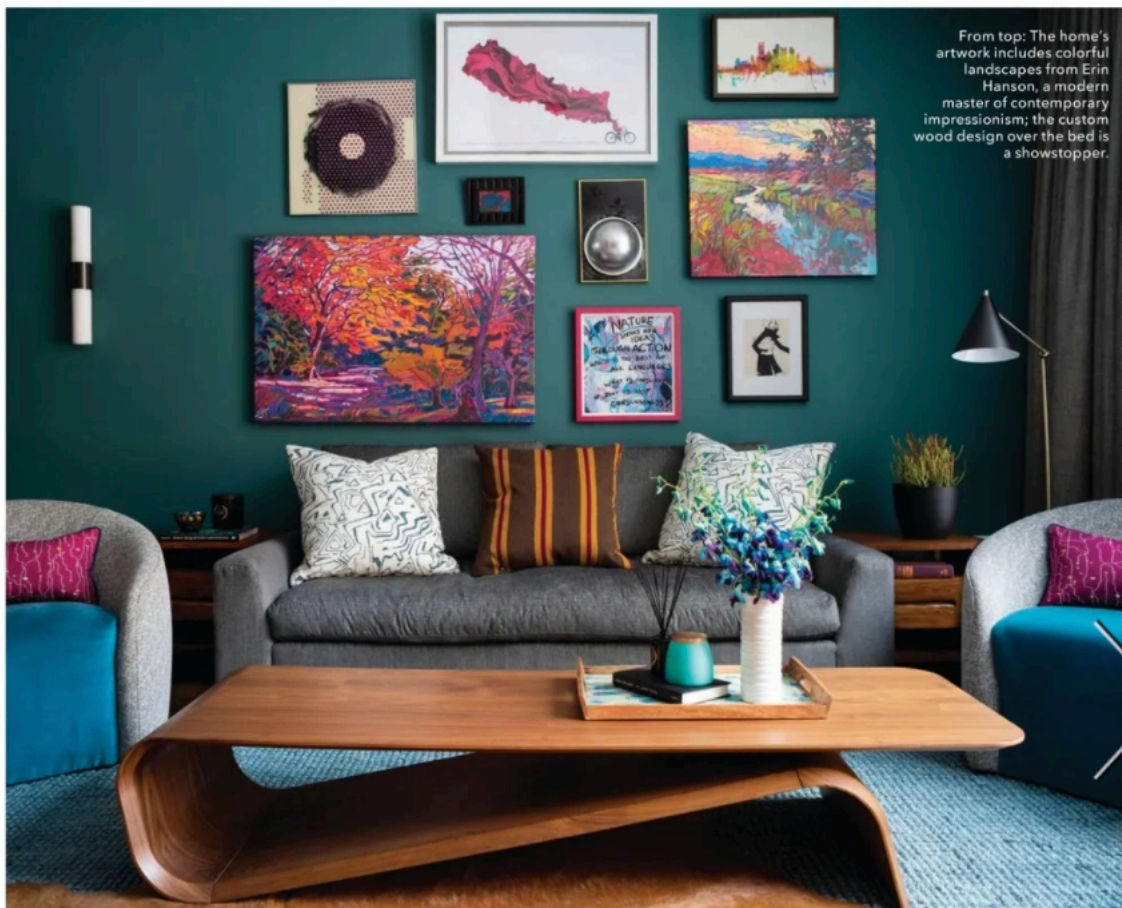

When it comes to matters of design and style, the creative possibilities of building or reimagining indoor spaces are limitless, from porcelain artistry to the perfectly crafted kitchen drawer to the way light reflects off a plaster wall. These creative masterminds—architects, home builders and interior designers—are elevating refined spaces across Colorado.

BOLD AND BRIGHT

The McDermott house is a sophisticated modern row home in Denver's LoHi neighborhood recently reimagined by local interior design firm Truss Interiors (trussinteriors.com). The owners, two doctors from New York, tasked Truss with a full renovation, from furnishings to wall coverings to built-in shelves. When they bought the 3,200-square-foot house, the couple discovered a skull mural painted by Denver muralist Pedro Barrios within the dining room's bookshelves. They loved it. To accommodate the mural, the interior design of the home revolved around it, with bold colors and eclectic vibes throughout the space. Furnishings include midcentury modern pieces from Mod Mood in Wheatridge. Capitalizing on dramatic floor-to-ceiling windows that allow light to pour in, Truss custom-designed shelving to create space for the owners' array of plants. In the main bedroom, they crafted wood slats over a neutral grasscloth on the wall and ceiling, which serve as a dramatic artistic focal point. And because one of the owners hails from Finland, Truss repurposed space from a basement closet and garage storage to make way for a custom in-home sauna. »
